Homemakers' Items

Here's good news for the home gardener whose popper plants are often most heavily laden as frost approaches.

Mrs. Mary L. Thompson, Extension nutritionist at V. P. I., says green peppers . . . if they are firm, crisp and thick-walled . . . are excellent for home freezing. For use in salads or other uncooked foods, green peppers may be frozen without preheating. Mrs. Thompson recommends using them in salads before they are completely thawed so they hold their crispness. To use in cooked dishes, preheating is recommended because it softens the pepper, makes it pack more compactly and helps hold its good eating qualities longer in frozen storage.

Here are her directions for freezing: Wash the peppers . . . cut out the stems . . . cut in half . . . then remove the seeds, and finally slice them or not, as you wish. Unheated halves or slices may be packed directly into containers and put into the freezer. No headspace is necessary. For preheating, boil the pepper halves three minutes and the slices two minutes. Then chill them promptly in cold water, drain and pack them tight in containers, and be sure to leave a half inch of headspace.

HEALTH INSURANCE FOR THE MILLIONS

During 1950, all forms of voluntary health protection made great gains, according to a factual report just issued by the Health Insurance Council. At the end of the year, at least half of the nation's population was covered by one type or another of voluntary insurance against economic hazards of sickness and accident.

This means that substancially more than 75,000,000 men, women and children have purchased health protection. They purchased it because they wanted it and could afford it. And the number is still growing very rapidly. Soon, the experts have forecast, at least 100,000,000 Americans will be covered.

The cost of voluntary health insurance is usually very modest—a few dollars a month covers a whole family. The benefits have been materially broadened, and authorized fees for doctors and hospitals have been increased to take care of the cost-trend of the times. The most striking thing of all has been the enthusiasm with which the people have responded when this protection is offered them. Health insurance is a relatively new concept, and its growth has been amazing.

A free and independent people gradually work out their problems. And they keep their freedom and self respect while doing so.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS
International Uniform Sunday School Lessons
BY DR. KENNETH J. FOREMAN
LESSON: Exodus 1-2:10.
PERSONAL READING: Psalm 27:7-14

Seeing God's Hand

Lesson for October 21, 1951

NOBODY is ever, in all his life, actually as wise as he thinks he is, but he is about 17 years old, before he has a remarkable case of this in the Bible, the story of a man whose viewpoint, at his 17th or 18th birthdays, completely changed, is the story of Moses.

Dr. Foreman

By the age of 17, though he was a about to be sadly insufficient as any one person has a chance to be, he was the oldest son of the wife of a wealthy cattleman named Jacob. Old Jacob left all the hands he could use, both after his sheep and cattle; he had all twelve of his sons to work. Eleven of them had real jobs, though next to the youngest of them all, was a kind of overseer. At least that is what his father intended.

He dressed the boy not in working clothes like the others but in fancy clothes, and used to send him around to see what the other boys were up to. Naturally Joseph's brothers did not like it at all; in fact they hated him so hard that they were on the point of murdering him.

By the very day of the proposed murder, however, the brothers did have a chance to sell him as a slave. So Joseph was sold off to the traveling slave-traders, and of all his brothers knew or cared, he was off to a lingering death.

• • •

Was the Hand of God?

Joseph expressed no opinion about that at the time. (He was probably dazed.) But judging from his whole character and behavior at the close of his life, it is no trouble to read his thoughts. He was sure of God; indeed, he must have had on a camel's back, for no matter in his subsequent life did Joseph walk the 200 miles to Egypt.

The better his condition on arriving, the higher the price. (As we said, out, a very wealthy bought him; perhaps only wealthy man could afford him.)

Joseph had asked Joseph while being driven down to Egypt and the slave-market, Where was God? Joseph might have answered: "Nowhere. The God is this, or my devillish brothers." Nobody means any good but the only reason they are selling instead of killing me is that they are making a little by it; these Ishmaelites are certainly not in love for their health. I am the son of my father trusted, and I shall die a wretched death in strange land.

• • •

The Wisdom of the Years

What was Joseph at seventeen. The age of 56 he saw a different picture. Many strange years had passed; Joseph had been slave and prisoner; then by a dramatic turn in his fortunes he had risen overnight to be the top food administrator, price controller and food stabilizer, all in one, for the whole empire of Egypt.

His brothers, driven by famine, had had to Egypt for help, and after playing cat-and-mouse with them for months, at last told them their great terror) who he was, he had returned good for evil. And when his whole family, father, brothers and all, and found refuge in a corner of Egypt. At last Jacob died.

Now the brothers, who made the mistake of thinking Joseph no better than themselves, had supposed that all Joseph was waiting for was his father's death, and would be the time for Joseph's long-delayed vengeance. Possibly Joseph the boy had dreamed of just such an hour. But Joseph the man was kind to his brothers, cowered before him, he said a memorable thing: "You meant me evil, but God meant it for good." (Gen. 50:20.)

He had no illusions about his brothers. They had been a bad lot. They had been a bad lot. They meant it for good." That was selling him into slavery, but the unintentional means of hundreds of lives. Joseph saw the wisdom of his 56 years can see the hand of God at all.

Traces of distress the thought brings to each of us: God's help just now be out of sight, day-looking back even on days we too shall see the
